Nestled in the heart of the Midwest, the Academy of Model Aeronautics (AMA) National Flying Site in Muncie, Indiana, spans over 1,100 acres of meticulously maintained grounds, making it the premier destination for aeromodelling events in the United States. The facility boasts multiple dedicated flying fields, each tailored to different types of model aircraft, providing competitors with world-class conditions to showcase their precision and skill.

At the center of the complex is Flying Site 1, the focal point for major international competitions such as the F3A World Championships. This field offers expansive, unobstructed airspace, perfect for precision aerobatics and large-scale competitive events. With its paved runways, the site is fully equipped to handle the demands of elite international competitors.

The AMA headquarters itself is a hub of aeromodelling history and innovation. It houses the National Model Aviation Museum, which features a rich collection of model aircraft dating back over a century. Visitors can explore the sport's evolution and learn how pioneers shaped what it has become today.

In addition to the competitive facilities, the venue includes the International Aeromodelling Center (IAC), the administrative home of the AMA. The on-site infrastructure ensures that competitors and spectators access ample amenities, including parking, restroom facilities, and spectator viewing areas.
